WEATHER KEY POINTS

04/23/22 - 04/29/22

Saturday - Friday

- Temperatures will see a considerable warming trend across the state through the weekend and first half of next week, with some minor heat impacts likely to develop across southern California as temperatures warm well into the 90s.
 - Some record high temperatures are possible, particularly on Monday which looks to be the hottest day.
- Locally gusty offshore winds will also be noted at times in the southern California mountains and deserts through Monday.
 - These winds may bring some localized elevated fire weather conditions, though widespread fire concerns are not expected.
 - Sundowner wind gusts below the Santa Ynez Range in Santa Barbara County could approach 55 mph Saturday night.
 - Santa Ana winds arrive on Saturday to areas of Ventura and Los Angeles Counties and peak on Sunday morning when gusts up to 50 mph are possible in the windiest areas before slowly diminishing late Sunday afternoon.
- Dry weather is also expected for the majority of the state through next week, except for some light rain over far northern California starting Tuesday.

PRECIPITATION FORECAST

04/23/22 - 04/25/22

No precipitation is expected through Monday

Note: Forecast precipitation amounts are an average for any particular location. Thunderstorms may produce locally higher rainfall amounts.
